NATIVE OHIO: PLANTS FOR BIRDS

February 4 - March 24, 2019

Public Reception: February 3, 3-5 p.m.

Artists were invited to create artistic pieces that convey the crucial relationships between native plants and the Ohio birds that rely on them.

Birds are the natural barometer for the overall health of an ecosystem. They are necessary agents of seed dispersal, aiding the health of native plant species and they consume millions of insects each year. To survive, native birds need native plants and the insects that have co-evolved with them. Come explore a visual representation of our Ohio native birds and the plants that they need for survival.
